There is a special expertise that comes from deep connections to an area—when one really understands their corner of the world due to both living and working there. Gallagher Co. construction has been in business for nearly 20 years, and the team lives and has offices on Mercer Island. “This area is a big focus for us,” says Owner Tom Gallagher. One early project that brought them acclaim was a Northwest classic home on Mercer Island. “Working with interior designer Erin Martin and architect Brad Sturman, we completed a really beautiful and technically challenging project,” Tom explains. “The home is a timeless classic and looks as good today as it did a decade ago.” Today the team is known for building in many styles and flexing skills as needed. Tom summarizes: “We can build whatever our clients dream up.” Boating around the Mercer Island area, residents and visitors will see dozens of homes that the team has built over the past two decades, and Tom says that the one consistent factor is “Gallagher quality.” Beyond the Island, the firm has worked in Mount Baker, Madison Park, Laurelhurst, Hunts Point, Woodinville and more. “With the right team, we will go to a lot of places,” says Tom. The dream project? “We have built in Wenatchee and would love to do more work there.”

ASK THE EXPERT

In what ways do you include the client in your creative process?

Often, we are called prior to the design team being selected. We love to walk the site with the client and suggest design teams that will be able to help bring their vision to life. The best projects are when the entire team is brought together early.

During pre-construction, we support the design team with estimates and construction capability requirements. When we are all in the field, the design team supports us with clarifications and details.

What are some ways that clients can work with trade professionals to ensure a painless design process?

Be clear with your ideas and goals, but open to new information and concepts. Have a sense of urgency. Trust the professionals who have experience to guide you.
